Dear Mr. Burnham:

Thank you for contacting us about submitting an idea. Although we accept ideas for review only on a limited basis, we appreciate the opportunity to explain our policy.

Kimberly-Clark Corporation has a very large and active research staff whose sole responsibility is the development and design of innovative products. Their efforts provide Kimberly-Clark with numerous new product opportunities, and almost all of our innovations are originated by this team. Even though a product or concept like yours may not be on the market, our research staff may have already developed and evaluated an identical or similar product. Therefore, as much as we appreciate your interest in our company and its products, Kimberly-Clark Corporation accepts for review only ideas that relate to environmental subjects or are the subject of a patent or patent application.

If your idea is patented, please send a copy of the patent only for our review. If your suggestion is the subject of a patent application, please sign the enclosed form, "Kimberly-Clark Corporation Policy for Reviewing Patent Applications," and return it with a copy of your patent application and a copy of the relevant receipt or proof of application from the applicable Patent Office. If your idea relates to an environmental subject, please sign the enclosed form, "Kimberly-Clark Corporation Policy for Reviewing Unsolicited Ideas," and return it with a description, drawing, or sample of your idea. We will then have your material reviewed and will notify you of the outcome.

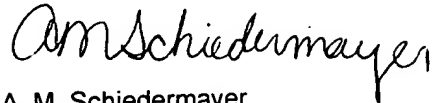

You may submit your materials to:

MULTI-USE DIAPER
Submitted 7-6-01 to P & G

Sir/Madam:

I understand from your communication of 10-12-01 that my submittal has been forwarded to the Technical Staff for review.

I would like to engage in a dialogue with the Technical Staff, in particular to answer questions and to highlight advantages of my invention which may not be too evident in the patent application.

My "Multi-use Diaper" is a logical next step in the evolution of disposable diapers. Manufacturing it does not involve venturing into new and possibly difficult technologies - to the contrary, it can take advantage of whatever machines and materials are already in use. It would not even be difficult to make trial runs to see how well it is received in the marketplace.

The huge market abroad, starting with Mexico to the south, will make this idea a Winner. At this point, timing is of the essence since the 12 month period for filing Convention applications abroad is running out.

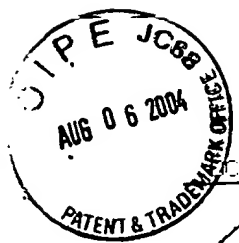

Please advise the status of my submission and please do give me a contact name in your Technical Staff -I will not abuse this privilege and will keep the information to myself.

Hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,

Herbert R. Burnham

The Procter & Gamble Company (P&G) is interested in product and process ideas from all sources. These insure a steady flow of new and improved products to meet consumer needs. We believe our success in generating useful ideas will greatly impact our Company's future. We depend primarily upon our employees and consultants to generate these ideas. However, we are also interested in ideas from outside P&G.

There are complex legal issues associated with idea submissions, involving such matters as trade secret ownership and confidential relationships. Your own lawyer can explain these to you.

We have a firm procedure in place to receive and evaluate such ideas. We have established firm guidelines which must be followed before ideas can be considered. P&G does not receive ideas under any circumstances or conditions, expressed or implied, which could create a confidential relationship or a contractual relationship between P&G and an idea submitter. P&G does not pay, or offer to pay, for an idea prior to a determination as to whether P&G has any interest in the idea.

Having an idea protected by a patent gives the patent owner certain legal rights to exclude others from the use of that idea unless they have specific permission. Your own lawyer can advise you about these rights. Ideas which are not patented or patentable can be used freely by everyone. This decreases their commercial value. For this reason, P&G views patent protection as important for our own inventions and ideas as well as those you are offering to us. As a matter of policy, we normally receive ideas from the general public only after the idea submitters have first taken steps to obtain patent protection for such ideas. We expect idea submitters to seek and rely wholly upon their patent rights, as defined by the claims of an issued patent, just as P&G is required to do in order to protect P&G rights.

At the very least, we require that you take steps, preferably through a qualified lawyer, to file an application for a patent. If you wish to disclose your idea after you have filed a patent application, you may contact us. In any case, we can receive and review your idea only on condition that you agree that P&G has no obligation to keep it secret, nor to refrain from using the idea, nor to pay you anything while your idea is being evaluated. After the idea has been evaluated, P&G has no obligation to keep secret any submitted information relating to the idea nor does P&G have any obligation to refrain from use or to pay for the use of any idea not specifically defined and covered by the claims of an issued, in force patent, unless P&G should agree otherwise in writing. Again, the benefit to you of having a patent is that it gives you certain rights to prevent others from using your idea, as defined by the patent claims, without your specific permission.

If the above conditions are acceptable, that is you agree to rely for your protection wholly on your patent rights as defined by the claims of an issued patent, you may submit a copy of your patent or patent application to P&G, together with a signed copy of this paper and any non-confidential information you feel would help in evaluating the submission.

Because of the complications involved, P&G cannot return any material submitted to us nor can we provide you with any explanation for whatever decision P&G reaches. Each of these conditions applies to the original disclosure as well as to anything you might later disclose, orally or in writing, unless we have reached a prior written agreement to do otherwise.

We do not receive suggestions of product names, advertising material, recipes, premiums, or contests. Further we do not receive suggestions for ideas, such as package art design, that are subject to protection by Design Patents or Copyrights. Such ideas are more appropriately obtained from our own employees and advertising agencies.

Each idea submitter warrants that the submitter is the owner of the idea being offered and that the submitter is legally free to make a disclosure and to convey patent rights to the idea being offered for disclosure.

The Procter & Gamble Company:

I understand your idea policy statement set forth above and accept the conditions without reservation. I am disclosing my idea on a NON-CONFIDENTIAL BASIS and agree that there is to be NO CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONSHIP whatever established in connection with my submission or your evaluation of the idea. My claim is patented or the subject of a pending patent application, [Patent no. _____ or pending Patent Application Serial No. 09/846,229]. I will RELY WHOLLY ON MY PATENT RIGHTS, AS DEFINED

BY THE CLAIMS OF AN ISSUED PATENT.
